Commentary

Stock markets continue to be volatile, partly as a result of the volatile political climate.

Just in the past month we've had the prorogation and then reopening of parliament, along with the so-called "Benn Act" to legislate against a no-deal Brexit. On the other side of the Atlantic there is a president who could soon be impeached!

Equity, bond and currency markets are all moved by such events to one degree or another. Stocks in particular are also reacting to whether the US-China trade war is on or off again at any particular time. Add to that the potential for conflict in the Middle East which caused a short term spike in the oil price.

Despite all of this, markets are generally higher than where they were at the start of the month.

In August we had topped up equities, carrying out a "volatility trade" when the FTSE 100 dropped below the 7,100 mark. As markets recovered above 7,400 in September we were able to sell this again for a gain of around 5%.

We had hoped our JP Morgan Defined Return product might kick out but the market remained stubbornly below the 7,318 kickout level on its 6 September anniversary date. This was particularly frustrating given the market was above this level on the day before and the day after the kickout date! However, it simply means that the product rolls on to the next anniversary and the potential return increases.

After selling the volatility trade, the fund is relatively "neutral" in terms of risk. There are some expensive parts of the stock market but there are also areas we think look great value, notably certain UK stocks which have lagged due to sentiment related to Brexit, and emerging markets, hit by the trade war. Should some certainty return to the world then we think these areas could do well.

We have recently added a new "global speculative" fund to portfolios, buying the Hermes Global Emerging Markets SMID (small & mid cap) fund. This diversifies our emerging market exposure away from purely Asian markets, and also adds smaller companies which we think have higher growth potential over the long term.

Hermes have a long and distinguished track record in emerging markets but this particular fund is relatively new, which meant we were able to secure an "early investor" discount on the annual management charge. This is only a small position for now which we plan to top up when the time is right.

We think the global economy is in a slower period but that a recession should be avoided, provided there are not too many political miss-steps! However, the bond market is pricing in something much more severe and implying some deep rate cuts. Should things turn out not to be as bad as the bond market expects, then certain fixed interest assets would likely fall in value. We therefore remain light on fixed interest for now.

We continue to be wary of UK property, and hold more in alternative equity and defined returns than normal.

Since launch on 1 November 2017 the fund has returned 6%. To put this into context, the average fund which holds between 20% and 60% in equities (the FE UT Mixed Investment 20%-60% Shares sector) rose by 5.31% over the same period.
