Commentary

Despite our best hopes, the markets in October began to discount a rise in the infection rate for the Covid-19 virus and the potential economic impact of further lockdowns. UK's largest companies in the FTSE 100 Index fell -4.75% over the month whilst the smaller companies in the FTSE AIM Index fared a little better with -1.06%; the Equilibrium AIM Portfolio returned 0.09%.

During the month, five of the investee companies announced trading updates with notably upbeat messages from GB Group, giftware company IG Design, software provider Craneware and market research company YouGov. Indeed, online security company, GB Group, was confident enough in the outlook to re-instate its dividend for the half-year.

Clearly the announcement of another national lockdown during November will present more challenges for some of our investee companies. We will continue to run analysis on all the stocks to check for resilience with close attention on those in the leisure industry.

In particular, holiday operator Jet2 is clearly impacted by this news although they currently have around £600m in cash on the balance sheet. This stock has been one of the best performing holdings over the last 3 months, reflecting the strong performance that we may see if the pandemic abates and/or a vaccine becomes available.

We sincerely hope all our clients and their families and friends remain safe and well over this difficult time.
